Mediator Style & Process Preferences

The only purpose of mediation is to assist the parties to settle the case on a basis everyone can accept. As a mediator, I help facilitate communication between the parties so they can achieve a lasting acceptable agreement for all. I have no authority to dictate the terms of the settlement or to impose a decision or to send anyone to jail or impose a fine. I cannot give legal advice.

The process is private and confidential, unlike the courthouse. The rules of evidence do not apply. The mediation procedure is informal. However, I expect the parties to act professionally towards each other and make a good faith commitment to try to reach a settlement that everyone can accept.

My mediator style is a combination of evaluative & facilitative mediation. I use both approaches, but my style is primarily facilitative. However, in certain situations I facilitate possible resolutions through inquiry, i.e. "Have you ever thought of this?"
